Asian American Institute Concerned About Proposed State Maps

Chicago, IL - The Asian American Institute, a member of the Asian American Center for Advancing Justice, is dismayed to see the apparent fragmentation of Asian American neighborhoods in the north side of Cook County by the proposed district lines the Illinois General Assembly released yesterday.

“We’ve shown that it’s possible to draw strong Asian American influence districts with little to no fragmentation of Asian American neighborhoods,” notes Tuyet Le, Asian American Institute’s executive director. “While we are encouraged by how the districts were drawn around Chinatown, we are disappointed about the districts in northern Cook County.” Through its past submissions to the House and Senate redistricting committees, AAI demonstrated that it is possible to draw optimized Asian American influence districts on the north side that take race as well as other socioeconomic factors and community preferences into consideration—including a Senate district composed of over 25% Asian Americans and two House districts of over 25% Asian Americans. In the maps proposed by legislators, one north side Senate district is 23% Asian and two House districts have 20% and 25% Asians respectively, yet these district lines fracture the clusters that AAI and numerous community organizations repeatedly identified as communities of interest.

“I’m dismayed at the new lines and implore the General Assembly to take another careful look at the fragmentation of our community in the north side of Chicago,” says Ahlam Jbara, acting director of the Council of Islamic Organizations of Greater Chicago. “Our community has grown tremendously and we’ve worked incredibly hard at increasing our voter registration, turnout, and overall civic engagement. The new lines shatter our community and dilute our votes; we deserve to have our voices heard by legislators who feel truly accountable to our community.”

The Asian American Institute urges the Illinois General Assembly to take additional community feedback into consideration before passing the very recently proposed maps. “The Asian American population in Illinois has increased nearly 40% over the last decade and the legislators must be mindful of the fast growing community’s legal right to have votes that count. The new Illinois Voting Rights Act will be an important tool for our community to enforce those legal rights,” said Ami Gandhi, AAI’s legal director.

AAI has been working in coalition with United Congress of Community and Religious Organizations (UCCRO) to create maps that show it is possible to draw strong Asian American influence districts that keep the Asian American community together and also respect the voting rights of Latinos and African Americans. UCCRO’s proposed district lines and AAI’s redistricting testimonies, maps, and demographic analyses can be found on AAI’s website at aai.advancingjustice.org.
